Leadership skill, stress and burnout concerns

Leaders and Managers are experiencing pressures and stress like never before. Levels of burnout are at their highest on record with Human Resource professionals extremely concerned for their leader's mental health and the subsequent impact on their skillset to support their people.

86% of Senior Leaders and Directors report experiencing work-related stress and are the most likely group to experience this.¹

More than 50% of women in leadership roles feel consistently burned out.²

75% of Senior Leaders and 64% of Managers are seriously considering quitting for a job that would better support their wellbeing.³

The stress felt by managers cascades to employees

impacting on wellbeing, retention and work performance.⁴

A lack of line management skill and confidence to support employee wellbeing is the top challenge in 2024.⁵

Positive impact of Compassionate Leadership

Our evaluation study shows supporting leaders and managers with the understanding and tools to improve their self-compassion contributes to managing their own psychological wellbeing, reducing personal stress and improving their resilience to deal with their challenges.

Valid psychometric measures of self-compassion show the benefits as a protective factor for a range of well-being indicators including mental health, stress, emotional exhaustion and burnout.⁶

A wide range of academic research shows that developing the practice of self-compassion is critical to how leaders support themselves and the compassion they give to others in work.

Leadership is recognised as an important influence on organisational culture⁷ and creating a compassionate culture at work is linked with lower levels of absenteeism and improved job satisfaction, retention and both individual and team performance.⁸

Leaders who practice compassion create supportive, collaborative and inclusive workplaces where people feel valued, connected and engaged.⁹

Assessing the effectiveness of the Compassionate Leadership Coaching Programme

A process evaluation was conducted to assess the effectiveness of the Compassionate Leadership Coaching Programme.

This Programme consists of:

Six small group live online coaching sessions over a six month period with an expert in the field of occupational psychology, self-compassion and compassionate leadership development.

Five online training webinars providing a full grounding in the theory and practice of self-compassion and compassionate leadership including tasks, reflection exercises and podcasts to embed knowledge.

Action planning and a focus on bringing self-compassion and compassionate leadership to work, team and organisation.

173 senior leaders from a range of UK based organisations took part in the evaluation study between 2020 and 2023.

Using valid and reliable psychometric measures, each individual was assessed on:

Self-Compassion

Mental Wellbeing

prior to the start of the Programme and after the fourth coaching session. All individuals also completed a quantitative and qualitative evaluation questionnaire.

The Power of the Programme

Results showed:

- The programme significantly increased participants' scores on all the sub-scales as well as the overall scores on the Self-Compassion Scale ($p < 0.001$) and the Mental Wellbeing Scale ($p < 0.001$).
- The Compassionate Leadership Coaching Programme displayed an overall large effect size ($d = 0.98$) on self-compassion and mental wellbeing.

- The Evaluation Questionnaire showed participants reported the highest satisfaction ratings for group coaching sessions (95%), webinar content (89%), programme materials (79%), programme process (94%) and application to their role and workplace (80%).
- 98% of participants would recommend the Compassionate Leadership Coaching Programme to colleagues and other leaders and managers.

“ I cannot express how much this programme has impacted on me both personally and professionally. It has truly been life-changing. ”
